Law360's 2025 Editorial Boards

Law360 is looking for avid readers of our publications to serve as members of our editorial advisory boards.

The purpose of the editorial advisory board is to get feedback from readers on how Law360 can improve its coverage and to provide our reporters with a pool of potential sources. All discussions from the advisory board calls are off the record.

All participants will be asked to join one board conference call a year, which will generally be held on Tuesdays, Wednesdays or Thursdays at 4 p.m. EST/1 p.m. PST, and to give occasional feedback to section editors via email about specific news coverage.

On the annual conference call, participants will be asked to prepare two to three talking points and cases or trends in their practice areas to discuss. The more specific the suggestions are, the more helpful they will be to Law360 in planning future coverage, so we ask that board members take some time prior to the meeting to consider their answers. We will also ask for suggestions on how we can improve our coverage.

For the email feedback, section editors will reach out periodically to ask questions such as whether articles are of interest, if the newsletter should be organized differently and if coverage should be expanded or changed.

You must currently subscribe to and read the relevant Law360 publication to serve on an editorial advisory board. If you are interested in serving on one of Law360's 2025 editorial advisory boards, please complete this brief survey and submit it by Friday, February 14 at 8 p.m. EST/5 p.m. PST.
